Session Description:

As we near the expiration of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), is the global political context favorable for inserting human rights into development agendas? How can human rights donors strengthen our commitment and effectiveness in advancing human rights and global development through a post-2015 agenda? Can a human rights lens on global development reinvigorate donors, policymakers, and those working in the field to look beyond the MDGs and enable us to achieve greater impact going forward? By exploring the intersection of the health and human rights of women and children and the global development agenda, this session will ask: What grantmaking strategies have worked? Which have failed? How can we more effectively partner with the UN system in crafting the global development agenda to advance human rights?
