

Sierra Schraff Thomas graduated from Western Washington University in 2006 with a degree in Spanish and a minor in American Cultural Studies. While at University she was involved with student organizations that advocated for migrants rights and access to higher education for migrant and Latino youth. In 2009 she joined Peace Brigades International (PBI) as part of the international accompaniment team working with at-risk HRDs in Guerrero, Mexico. From 2009-2013 she served as field team coordinator for PBI Mexico, coordinating and providing support to two teams of volunteers. Since August of 2013 she has worked as a Protection Officer with ALUNA and coordinated the Urgent Action and Security group for the National Women Human Rights Defenders Network in Mexico, providing support in emergency situations and conducting risk analysis from a psychosocial perspective for WHRDs.