The International Funders for Indigenous Peoples invites you to two events in January to discuss what the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) called 'the Way Forward'—ancient solutions to the most pressing problems of our times.

On January 22, IFIP kicks off its Regional Meeting series at the Christensen Fund in a mid-day session on Food Sovereignty, Indigenous Peoples and Climate Change. Whether your interest is the environment, sustainability, economic justice, human rights or climate change, IFIP's first regional meeting will introduce a new paradigm in philanthropy to provide the highest impact in all these program areas. Donors are welcome to attend either session or both sessions.

JANUARY 22

11am–1pm Specialized training on the Grantmaker's Guide: Strengthening International Indigenous Philanthropy, which offers principles of funding from visionaries. This session will explore case studies of successful collaboration between Indigenous communities and global philanthropy, proven tools for grantmakers, and best practices from the most experienced in the field.

1pm–3pm Working lunch on Food Sovereignty, Indigenous peoples and Climate Change. Foundations globally are re-engaging in agricultural development as the world's food systems once again appear increasingly precarious, and there is a rapid increase in grantmaking around healthier food systems. This session explores ways to work with Indigenous Peoples to support the vibrancy of their traditional agricultural systems and to discuss climate change strategies.

JANUARY 24

1:30–2:30pm On January 24, IFIP is leading a session on Mitigating Climate Change: Learning from Indigenous Tradition at the International Human Rights Funders Group conference. Human rights funders will learn from both a donor and Indigenous Peoples who support Indigenous adaptation and mitigation strategies to climate change. They will share strategies to achieve high impact through collaboration with those communities with ancient solutions to the most critical threat to the Earth today.
