The Security & Rights Collaborative of the Proteus Fund presents a webinar funder briefing:

Domestic Drone Surveillance: Civil Liberties and Human Rights Implications and Advocacy Efforts on the Use of Drones by U.S. Law Enforcement

Since 9/11, the United States' national security policies and actions have expanded and changed dramatically, with domestic surveillance being one of the most controversial and alarming of these practices. Enhanced technologies have enabled federal, state and local law enforcement to expand their surveillance and data collection, with examples including the proliferation of data sharing fusion centers, the NSA's collection of phone and electronic communications, and the growing use of drones by domestic law enforcement.

The Security & Rights Collaborative invites you to join us in a conversation on the growing use of drones for surveillance by law enforcement agencies, the privacy and civil liberties implications surrounding their use, and advocacy strategies calling for regulation and protections.

Featuring:

- Shahid Buttar, Executive Director, Bill of Rights Defense Committee
- Lynn Fahselt, Director and Senior Media and Opinion Analyst, ReThink Media
- Linda Lye, Staff Attorney, ACLU of Northern California
