

Paisarn Likhitpreechakul started the first gay column in a mainstream Thai newspaper in 2002, and used his capacity as a journalist to advance and advocate for LGBT rights issues. Together with a group of LGBT activists, he co-founded FORSOGI (www.forsogi.org) in 2009, after the Chiangmai Gay Pride Parade was shut down by a mob. He is currently enrolled in a master's degree program in International Law and Human Rights at the UN-mandated University for Peace in Costa Rica as an Asian Peacebuilding Scholar.

Navin Moul joined AJWS in July 2010 as a program officer for Asia. She currently manages the natural resource right portfolios in Burma, Cambodia, Sri Lanka, and Thailand. Before coming to AJWS, she worked at the San Francisco Foundation, where she supported community-based organizations involved in social justice activism on issues such as marriage equality, immigrant integration and civic engagement. She holds a master's degree in Ethnic Studies from the University of California, Berkeley. Her languages include Khmer and English.
